The real sin of Microsoft is the corruption of contract law. Their tie-in provisions damaged me extensively. I was unable to buy an IBM Computer with OS/2 loaded instead of Windows. That is a corruption of contract law and I am disappointed that you are letting them off so easy. It's not really about 'intellectual property' and certainly not about "innovation." Microsoft is a stealer of property not an "innovator."

Windows is a jerry-built mediocre product and we have been stuck with it due to the Microsoft corruption of contract law.
